

Employer Financed Benefit (EFB) pension

Who is entitled to an EFB pension?

Any member of the Retirement Scheme who was previously a member of the Local Government Pension Fund or NSW Retirement Fund would have retained the option to receive a portion of their superannuation benefit as a pension.

Also, any member of the Local Government Pension Fund would have retained the childrens and orphans pension option which may apply upon the death of the member.

You can confirm if you are entitled to this option by checking your latest annual benefit statement or, by contacting Member Services.

How does the pension work?

Eligible members can convert all or a portion of their employer-financed lump sum benefits (and additional benefits where applicable) into a pension. This is calculated by using the member's benefit points multiplied by their applicable salary and a factor. The factor depends on the member's age at pension commencement, the reason for termination and whether a reversionary pension is applicable (discussed below).

The EFB component is reduced to take into account the 15% tax payable on employer contributions. Any pension paid to a member who is 60 or over is tax-free or, if under 60, a rebate is available to reduce the tax payable.

A member's remaining benefit, consisting of their personal contributions and Basic Benefit entitlements, can only be paid as a lump sum, but it can be rolled over to buy an income stream if desired.

Are there any restrictions on when the pension entitlement is payable?

An EFB pension option is generally only available to members retiring at or after age 60, if they retire due to total and permanent invalidity prior to age 60, or upon the member's death or they die. For example, if a member retires at age 58, they are not eligible for the EFB pension option.

How long will the pension last?

The EFB pension is payable for life and is automatically indexed each year in accordance with the Consumer Price Index (i.e. inflation). Once the election has been made to take an EFB Pension, the pension cannot be converted to a lump sum.

Can a member elect for their EFB pension to continue after their death?

All pensions paid to former members of the Local Government Pension Fund are reversionary - i.e. the surviving spouse of a deceased pensioner is also entitled to a pension.

Former members of the NSW Retirement Fund are required to nominate, prior to commencing the pension, whether they wish for their benefit to be 'reversionary', that is, whether they wish for a pension to be paid to their surviving spouse upon their death. Once a decision has been made, it is final, and the amount of pension payable depends on this nomination.

The surviving spouse would be entitled to approximately five-eighths (or 62.5%) of the pension entitlement previously received by the member.

What are some of the issues a member should consider when deciding to take the EFB pension?

- Electing the pension option provides some investment security as the pension does not rely on investment returns (it ensures at least a minimum level of income).
- Selecting the pension option may provide a higher benefit when compared to the lump sum option, should a member live past their statistical life expectancy. Therefore, if a member and/or their spouse are in good health, they may be more inclined to select this option.
- The financial position of a member may influence their decision. If a member is comfortable with the level of investments they have, they may be less inclined to rely on a pension and elect to take a lump sum in order to utilise another type of investment.
- The importance a member places on the risk that they (and possibly their spouse) may die in the early years of their retirement, meaning they forfeit the extra funds that could have been passed on to their estate, needs to be assessed.
- The overall attractiveness of the pension option when compared to publicly available pensions needs to be considered. For example, a member would need to compare how much they would receive from the EFB pension versus the income they may receive from another pension provider.
- For social security purposes, the pension is exempt from the assets test.
- The EFB Pension cannot be converted once the election to commence an EFB Pension has been made. However, before deciding whether an EFB Pension is the right choice for you, we highly recommend that you discuss it with your professional financial advisor.

How does a member find out what their pension entitlement may be?

As a member of the Retirement Scheme, Member Services can answer all your superannuation questions. Member Services can provide you with a quote of your expected pension and lump sum entitlements at retirement. You can contact them by calling 1300 369 901 between 8.30am and 5pm on any working day.

Need further information?

If you would like further information or the address of your local branch please visit our website at www.eisuper.com.au or contact Member Services on 1300 369 901 between 8.30am and 5pm on any business day.

Please note that the information contained in this document is of a general nature only and does not constitute personal advice as it does not take into account your personal objectives, financial situation or needs. Any advice in this document is provided by FuturePlus Financial Services Pty Ltd (ABN 90 080 972 630) as an Australian Financial Services Licensee (AFSL 238445) on behalf of the Trustee of the Energy Industries Superannuation Scheme, Energy Industries Superannuation Scheme Pty Ltd (ABN 72 077 947 285). Energy Industries Superannuation Scheme Pty Ltd is an APRA Registrable Superannuation Entity Licensee (ABN Pool A - 22 277 243 559 and ABN Pool B - 64 322 090 181). Members should not rely solely on this information and should consider their own personal objectives, financial situation and needs before acting on this information. Prior to making any investment decision you should obtain and consider the relevant Product Disclosure Statement (PDS) pertaining to your Scheme membership and seek professional investment advice. Date issued: 26 August 2009.

0000-EISS-08-09